“ Yes, Lana, an answer to your question long ago, I do believe in Santa Claus. I believe in the spirit of Santa Claus, where everyone can be kind to one another. I also believe in God and that is why I believe that you are now with your mom and dad and those who have gone on before you. Please give them hugs for me and also give my mom and dad a hug if you will. I love you, I will always love you and I will always miss you. Until we meet again. You were very good cousin and friend to me.

“ I remember the first time I met Lana. She and her sister Cherri were staying out in the desert on a seed trip. Me and Sarah Hess were also out in the desert picking seed. Me and Sarah always called them Lavern and Shirley. Lana won my heart that trip so I went home and befriended her son Richard (who is the funniest person I've ever met). I just knew that if she had a son, that I needed to have him for a friend. I remember when Lana so lovingly, yet bluntly, told me that I needed to read the book Women Love Too Much. I read it and she was right. I remember multiple times when she helped care for my sick pets. I remember when JoDee drove Lana and Richard out to Oregon for Jaden's birth. I remember how much she fell in love with the little western town of Sisters that we drove through in Central Oregon, when they took me and Jaden back to Utah with them. I remember how much she has always loved Jaden and how much she helped out with him when she was little. She watched him all the time. I remember her coming to visit me at the University Hospital after me and Richards bad car accident. I remember that I got through nursing school because she would watch my other little kids for me when I took classes at Snow College. It didn't matter that they were her actual grandkids or if I was dating Richard or not. She claimed them anyway. I remember how she would always take my kids' socks off when they were at Grandma Lana's. They still hate to wear socks. I remember how whenever I was down and out and feeling distraught, I could always go to her house for some love, a listening ear and wise advice. I remember how she always made me laugh when I was trying to take things too seriously. I will always remember you Lana. You have been an angel to me in my life.
