“Nansa was beautiful, charming, full of life, and good friend. Talent spewed out of her, as if she could light up the universe with it. She sang so beautifully; our entire student dorm would listen to her singing while holding our breaths. She played guitar and could sing songs in English, Russian, and Mongolian. Her dancing mesmerized anyone that witnessed it. It seemed like flowers bloomed wherever she stepped, leaving us engulfed in her warmth. For five years, we studied together for law in Irkutsk, and lived in the same dorm sharing our food, joy, and our sadness. She was a good friend in the true sense of the word. Everywhere she went, she was adored, truly a magnetizing person. After we graduated, we kept contact, and destiny brought us together in the US. In 2013, I hosted her in Denver, and we spent a wonderful 4 days together remembering our youth and friends. At that time, she had already been diagnosed, but her spirit was still high. She made me realize that until sickness strikes, you don't know what makes a person, a person. She was a true fighter and showed remarkable mental strength. She taught me to value life and to remain steady no matter what life throws at you. She taught me that the hardships of life don't break you, your response does. I will remember her always. Rest in Peace, my dear Friend.

With all my love,
